THE CHANGING FACE OF THE CAMPUS

This new map of the SJ campus provides a bird's-eye view of the new buildings that have sprung up in recent years, as well as more familiar ones. Easily identifiable are such landmarks as the Hall of Languages, Cross College, Hendricks Chapel, and—despite its comparatively short history—the Carrier Dome. Less recognizable is the new Cross-Hinds School of Management Building, situated in the block bounded by Waverly, South Crouse, and Irving Avenues and University Place. Surrounded by landscaped grounds, the building occupies the entire block. (For more on the new management building, see page 5.)

The solid black area on the map, stretching along University Avenue between Waverly Avenue and University Place, marks the location of the soon-to-be-built Schine Student Center. Washell Hall, which now stands on a portion of that site, will be demolished to make room for the new structure. (For more on fundraising and construction plans for the Schine Student Center, see page 3.)

The new map was developed by Cindy Hoot, assistant director of the Office of Residence and Dining Services, and was designed and drawn by Jonzirz da Fonseca. A graduate student in visual communications, da Fonseca previously taught graphic design and illustration in São Paulo, Brazil.
